Basirat Razaq-Shuaib is an inclusive education specialist, a children's author, a social entrepreneur and a global speaker advancing the conversation on inclusive education in Nigeria. She is the Founder of The Winford Centre for Children and Women - a charity supporting children with developmental disabilities in Nigeria, and registered as a United Nations Global Compact partner organisation. She is also the CEO of The Winford Centre International- the premier provider of developmental and learning aids for children with special needs in Nigeria.

Basirat is a doctoral student of disability and inclusive education at the University of Cambridge and holds multiple degrees and certifications. She has published two children's picture books - "I am not naughty- I really really mean it!" and "Dragons can sing" both targeted at educating children, parents and teachers on empathy, kindness and disability inclusion. Her work has been recognised by the British Council ELTons and translated into 3 international languages.

Basirat remains committed to promoting the inclusion of children with developmental disabilities and their families in society so that they have a chance to achieve positive outcomes and contribute positively to economic development.
